A BOOK FOR PILOTS AND PASSENGERS Alike

Richard Bach set out with two friends to revive the old hand-forming days of the pioneering pilots. With a few friends and a small modern monoplane they stepped from behind the small county airport, flying a route through the American mid-West, sleeping rough under the wings of their planes, staying overnight stores and picnic spots to attract customers for their Guller jet-cakes. . . . Each tale of their adventures, of prosperity one day and poverty the next, and through it all emerges the memorable philosophy of living, freedom and life.

'Ave book that can make a non-flyer like myself want to go out and buy one the barn with hawthorn struts and oiled paper on the back must be a good book
