Every year 1500 sales executives and salesmen are personally trained in salesmanship by Alfred Tack. At the beginning of each course they are told: "We are passing on to you all that we have learned in thirty years of selling and controlling a large sales organisation." Alfred Tack has now put all these sales ideas into a book. This is not a book of impossible theories which no ordinary person can put into practice; it contains the practical experiences of men who are in the field selling for a living.

In order to help raise the standard of salesmanship in this country, thirty-five of Britain's foremost sales executives have contributed articles to this book on what they consider to be the most important and vital aspect of selling today.

"A most valuable manual which cannot fail to help even the most die-hard salesman . . . rich in wisdom and practical experience . . . a book that does great service to the selling profession."

Bulletin of the British Sales Promotion Association

This book is a must for all those concerned with sales promotion of every kind. No matter how many years of experience a sales manager may have, there is always something he can learn from others; and in this book is the combined knowledge of twenty-two of the country's most successful sales executives—specialists in selling such varied commodities as cheese, air-conditioning plant, petrol, and air-freight services, to mention only a few. SUCCESSFUL SALES MANAGEMENT provides a mass of information covering all aspects of selling.
