CASSY SCANDAL

Zola Ross

This is Zola Ross's frankest, liveliest novel, full of excitement and passion. It is the story of the momentous years in the life of the beautiful Cassy Scandal from 1885 to 1889, a brawling, lusty period.

In 1885, Cassy was eighteen with curly red hair, a flattering tongue and disturbing beauty. Times were hard and jobs were scarce in Seattle and the blame was put on the Chinese who worked hard at the dirty, menial jobs. Public opinion was loudly in favour of running them out of town but Cassy objected and when the anti-Chinese feeling exploded into two days of bloody rioting she was involved.

But far more cataclysmic events were on the way. Her strange wedding day when she married Paul Archer marked a change in her personality. Gone was her old softness, gone was her flattering charm and gentility and by an odd turn of events she became a property owner on the Lava Beds, a boisterous, raucous district, full of saloons, gambling houses and brothels.

At last, in 1889, when she was twenty-two, two disasters threatened her on the same day. This terrific day is the climax of the book.

Cassy Scandal is a Scarlett O'Hara type of heroine and her adventures rival even those of that legendary figure of fictional history.
